Organization of Collection

The Alexander Library houses the principal research collection for Latino Studies. The largest government publications collections within the Rutgers University Libraries can also be found at Alexander Library and the Library of Science and Medicine. Additional collections are available at the Dana Library, the Robeson Library, and the Newark and Camden Law libraries. Special Collections and University Archives collects, preserves, and makes available primary and secondary resources pertaining to New Jersey history and culture. The Center of Alcohol Studies Library houses collections dealing with the biomedical houses collections dealing with the biomedical and psychosocial aspects of beverage alcohol, its use, and related consequences. The Media Center unit offers a selected list of moving image (videotape, DVD, laser disc) on the topic and the Art Library houses materials related to the Latino art experience. Some additional documents are included in RUcore, a community repository that will make the intellectual property of Rutgers University, its faculty and graduate students, permanently available for scholars and researchers.
